What makes a house interesting? The answer is simple: unique collections, art and keepsakes from your travels – as well as a good dose of playfulness! Salomé believes you shouldn't take yourself too seriously. Here, one of Ann Gadd's well-known sheep paintings features a rocket and since Willem is an atomic physicist, this always leads to all sorts of witty comments from visitors. At the same time, this quirky painting is quite at home next to the valuable Pierre Volschenk that Salomé received from her daughter. 'It's sad if you have nothing in your house that makes you smile. Buy a little something whenever you travel and every time you look at it, you'll remember the good times.'
